

Louise Merrington

Strategic Analyst from Australia

louise.merrington@gmail.com

Louise Merrington is a strategic analyst with the Australian Department of Defence, specialising in international relations. She received her PhD from the Australian National University in 2012. Her thesis Beyond the Protracted Contest: Redefining the Sino-Indian Relationship examined competition, cooperation, and conflict in the China-India relationship in South, Southeast, and Central Asia, and selected global governance institutions.

Louise has been deeply involved with China for nearly two decades, having studied Mandarin since high school. When she was eighteen, she travelled to China for the first time, spending six months teaching English in Yunnan province. On her return to Australia, she completed her bachelor's at Melbourne University in Media/Communications and Chinese, while working as a freelance journalist. During her third year, she undertook a six-month exchange at Tsinghua University in Beijing. Her honours thesis compared Chinese government censorship of the internet and television.
